Oysterville boil-water advisory ends

OLYMPIA — Oysterville residents can stop boiling their drinking water. Lab tests show the water now meets safe drinking water standards.

The boil-water advisory was issued September 30 after E. coli bacteria were detected in the water for the second time in recent months.

To reduce the risk of illness, the state Department of Health required the water system to treat its water with chlorine. Chlorination is effective at killing E. coli and preventing waterborne diseases.

Oysterville is a small community on the northern tip of the Long Beach Peninsula in Pacific County.
